

RQi™ Master Practitioner course

Overview

This course is for qualified RQi™ Practitioners who want to develop their skills further. On the Master Practitioner course, you'll develop the knowledge and skills to deliver our group resilience workshops using a selection of 21 mini modules as building blocks.

The mini-modules (see pages 3 and 4) map to one or more of the RQi™ sub-scales and have been developed by Kirros based on research from positive psychology, health psychology, and neuroscience, over the last eight years. The materials include presentations, trainer notes, and course workbooks.

Course delivery

There are four weekly sessions to attend. The first three are 3 hours each, delivered remotely. The final one-day workshop is run either remotely or face-to-face depending on availability of participants.

During the first three sessions, the facilitators deliver a selection of workshop modules, so you experience the content first hand. During the fourth session, you'll deliver selected materials yourself to the rest of the group, with discussion and structured feedback.

There are also remote learning exercises with the RQi Team Report™ demonstrating how to use the report to guide module selection for group workshops with teams. Lastly, there is a reading list with a mix of mandatory and optional articles.

Facilitators

This course is delivered by Matthew Critchlow, Managing Director of Kirros and Visiting Lecturer at the University of Westminster. Matthew will be accompanied by one or more RQi™ Master Practitioners on the course.
